Quality care relies on communication

By George Glass

Hyperbarics prides itself on individualized communication and care for hyperbaric oxygen therapy (HBOT). Because sessions cover everything from maximizing athletic performance to people with traumatic brain injuries, it is necessary to communicate differently with each individual. Our standard of care also needs to meet individual needs in order to derive the best results possible from each session.

In order to attain the best possible results, each person on our team from the hyperbaric technician, to the medical director, to the manager and owners must create a personalized connection with each client.

Whether a patient is coming for one session in our mild hyperbaric chamber to acclimate to elevation, or they are coming in for a series of treatments for a more extensive medical treatment in our hard-sided chamber, the team of practitioners at Mountain Hyperbarics will provide the necessary medical intake and prescription (if necessary), and overview of the HBOT session(s) in order to create a comfortable environment and get the best results possible.

Each person has a specific goal they wish to attain with a session. It is our responsibility as healthcare providers to give the individual the greatest opportunity for success.

George Glass is the Owner of Mountain Hyperbarics. Glass has been in healthcare for over 27 years.
